

Admission Tests

Applications to the University of Oxford and the University of Cambridge, plus courses for medicine, dentistry and veterinary science require students to undertake an admission test along with their early application.

A few other universities will require these too, for specific courses: so please check carefully.

Many early entry tests include assessment of thinking skills, specific subject knowledge, behavioural styles, and medicine and healthcare; they are specifically designed to aid universities in their selection process.

If you apply for a course that requires an admissions test, you'll need to check the registration deadline for the test, venue of the test, when you will sit it, and what it includes, as well as the deadline for your UCAS application.

Please make regular checks as to what is needed for each course and the various registration and examination dates.
